Section A—READING SKILLS

(20 Marks)

Reading Comprehension Through Unseen Passages

1. Read the following text.

(10 Marks)

1. Allowing forests to regenerate on their own has been championed as a strategy for reducing planet-heating carbon in the atmosphere while also boosting biodiversity, the benefits ecosystems offer and even the fruitfulness of livelihoods.
2. But efforts to increase global tree cover to limit climate change have skewed towards erecting plantations of fast-growing trees. The reasons are obvious: planting trees can demonstrate results a lot quicker than natural forest restoration. This is helpful if the objective is generating a lot of timber quickly or certifying carbon credits which people and firms buy to supposedly offset their emissions.
3. While plantations on farms and barren land can provide firewood and timber, easing the pressure on natural forests and so aiding their regeneration, ill-advised tree planting can unleash invasive species and even dispossess people of their land.
4. Sometimes these trees are planted in grasslands and other ecosystems where tree cover is naturally low. The result is that afforestation harms rural and indigenous people who depend on these ecosystems for grazing and produce. The continued planting of exotic trees risks new invasive species like wattle palm in India introduced 200 years ago. This includes carefully choosing plantation species to ensure they don't become invasive.

5. There are positive case studies too. The Forest Rights Act of 2006 empowered village assemblies to manage forest areas that had once been in traditional use. Several village assemblies in the Gadchiroli district of central India have restored degraded forests and managed them as a sustainable source of tendu leaves, which are used to wrap bidi. In the Kuchchh grasslands of western India, communities were able to restore grasslands by removing the invasive gando bawal (meaning “mad tree”) first introduced by British foresters in the late 19th century.
6. The success of forest restoration efforts cannot be measured by tree cover alone. The Indian government’s definition of “forest” still encompasses plantations of a single tree species, orchards, and even bamboo, which actually belongs to the grass family. This means that biennial forest surveys cannot correctly quantify either forest restoration or the displaced native trees.
7. Natural forest regeneration and plantations for timber and fuel should both be encouraged but with due consideration of how other ecosystems and people will be affected. Determining whether local people and the environment are benefiting is a more helpful measure of success than simply scanning a forest canopy from above. Some of the best practices on restoration implemented by communities such as Gadchiroli should be studied and scaled up and ecosystems in which trees are scarce should be revived too. (429 Words)

Answer the following questions, based on the passage above.

(1×10=10)

- (a) The writer says that "Planting trees does not necessarily mean a forest is being restored." Which of the following points does not substantiate the given statement? (1)

- (i) The actual policy of reforestation is skewed.
- (ii) Natural forest restoration is not given adequate time.
- (iii) Fast-growing trees are planted.
- (iv) Forest restoration should be measured by tree cover alone.

- (b) What is the purpose of the writer in the given lines from paragraph 1? Rationalise your response in about 40 words. (2)

The Forest Rights Act of 2006 empowered village assemblies to manage forest areas which had once been in traditional use.

- (c) Complete the sentence appropriately. (1)

The author questions the authenticity of the biennial forest surveys because .....

- (d) The passage includes some words that are opposites of each other. From the sets (i)-(v) below, identify two sets of word-pairs that are NOT antonyms. (1)

- (i) Natural regeneration and methodical plantation
- (ii) Ecosystem and biodiversity
- (iii) Biennial and annual
- (iv) Indigenous and native
- (v) Communities and government

- (e) Complete the sentence appropriately. (1)

Ecosystems and livelihoods dependent on forests will thrive, biodiversity will get a boost and global warming will get reduced if only .....

- (f) Based on the reading of the passage, examine, in about 40 words, how governments of countries are harming the forests and consequently the environment because of their short-sighted policies. (2)

- (g) What bearing does the policy of planting exotic trees like wattle and gando bawal have in the long run? Eliminate the odd effect from the list given below. (1)

(i) It can unleash invasive species of trees that harm the local ecosystems.

(ii) It can negatively affect pasturelands and the forest produce for indigenous people.

(iii) It can eventually lead to the restoration of degraded forests and grasslands.

(iv) It leads to the scanning of tree canopies from above.

- (h) According to the author, what is the most important contribution of the local communities that ideally the government should follow? (1)

2. Read the following text.

(10 Marks)

1. The global value of counterfeit and pirated items is estimated to be between $2.5 trillion and $4.7 trillion, with pharmaceuticals accounting for roughly one-third of the total, particularly during the 2020 pandemic and post-pandemic years. Some brands shifted their focus and dollars away from policing copycat products because they were squeezed by the pandemic enabling the counterfeiters to thrive.

2. Counterfeit items are prevalent across consumer goods. The spurious goods often pass through major trade hubs such as Hong Kong, UAE, Singapore, and other transit points along the route, purposely creating complex shipping patterns and convoluted documentation that help protect the actual source.
3. Counterfeiting is not limited to high-end luxury items but even common items. Fake goods are everywhere: on well-known e-commerce sites, social media platforms, and even on websites that have been set up to mimic real brands.
4. As much as 27% of consumers are unaware that products are counterfeit at the time of purchase, but 31% willingly purchase spurious products, a survey says. An important finding of the survey was that consumer perception pegged the extent of counterfeiting at 25-30 per cent of the market, higher than the general industry expectation.

5. India ranks among the top 5 countries for counterfeit goods with a very complex domestic retail environment in major cities from the malls to the footpath hawkers, but even more so in rural areas due to inadequate governmental regulation, legal framework, and weak programming of consumer awareness. The country should harness the strength of active consumer participation. (253 Words)

Answer the following questions, based on the passage above.

- (a) Complete the following analogy appropriately, based on your understanding of the passage. (1)

We can say that the copies or imitations of a product in the market can be compared to a duplicate actor who resembles a popular and established star but cannot be taken as authentic and genuine because he/she .....

- (b) Fill in the blanks with the appropriate option from those given in brackets, based on your understanding of paragraph 5. (1)

The market for counterfeit products in India is really huge owing to low levels of consumer awareness, inadequate government regulation and loose laws ..... is (a fact/an opinion) because it is ..... (a subjective judgement/an objective detail).

- (c) Fake goods are all-pervasive but their harmfulness was particularly felt during the pandemic of 2020. Justify the following, in about 40 words. (2)

(d) Based on the passage, which two concerns associated with the protection of the actual source of counterfeit goods are rather worrisome? (1)

(i) .....

(ii) .....

(e) Study the statement: Earlier counterfeit products were limited to luxury items or high-end products out of reach of the common man.

State any one inference that can be drawn from this. (1)

(f) Select the option/options that correctly display/s what 'counterfeit' signifies in the passage. (1)

Image (i)

Image (ii)

Image (iii)

Image (iv)

Image (v)

(g) Infer one benefit and one drawback of the survey conducted on spurious goods in the markets and consumer behaviour. Answer in about 40 words. (2)

(h) Which of the following is the main takeaway from the study mentioned in the passage? (1)

(i) Counterfeit items are prevalent across all consumer goods.

(ii) Spurious goods market is supported by international trade hubs.

(iii) 31% of customers willingly buy fake goods than unintentional ones (27%).

(iv) Active consumer participation is the answer to this problem.
